The STANDING FIGURE OF A BEAUTY is of the Kakiemon type, Arita porcelain from late 17th century Japan. It parallels the early development of Ukiyo-e (which culminated in the great Japanese prints of the 18th century) and is the appearance in manufacturing of porcelain of what may be called genre figurines. Sometimes they verge on folk art and very often they are damaged. This is not the case with the Cleveland figure which is very sophisticated in modeling and decoration but is also in perfect condition. It can certainly stand comparison with the best examples known.
